

Nowadays, bilingual schools are becoming very popular in our country. Due to this fact, lots of people think ^{of} about their pros and cons. Are the pros more important than the cons or just the opposite?

On the one hand, a lot of people believe that in a global society everybody should speak English fluently. At bilingual schools, pupils receive the lessons in English and Spanish, so they promote both languages. Furthermore, this ^a advantage is really important for young people, since the current crisis is causing the emigration of lots of them.

On the other hand, other people say that bilingual schools don't ~~maner~~ succeed in achieving their goals, as their pupils don't manage to learn English perfectly or Spanish either.

To conclude, although some bilingual schools don't obtain good results, in many cases this is because ~~of~~ they aren't enough prepared to be bilingual. I strongly believe that schools should be bilingual as currently we live in a global society, in which the main language is English.
